

Element A

"Beauty and the Beast" is a fairytale, and it has been made into a musical. For the musical, an enchanted rose is required to convey emotion and move the plot forward. The rose petals must fall off at certain times during the musical. If the last petal falls, the Beast will be a beast forever. The enchanted rose is an essential element of the musical and can not be done without it.

Mrs. Moody is leading the "Beauty and the Beast" musical at Brentwood High School, and she said that she does not have a rose that can drop petals at certain times. She has asked for a rose to be made that can drop petals at 3 specific times during the play. She said it will be on stage for the entirety of the play and will not have to be moved off. She has requested the rose be at least 1.5ft tall and big enough for everyone in the theater to see it clearly and understand it is a rose. The petals must be big enough for the audience see falling. A theater professor from Vanderbilt University said we should build it for the middle of the audience to have the best view. This ensures that people very close and people very far from the stage both have a good view of what the rose is and what is happening. Mrs. Moody has asked that the method of dropping the rose petals should be controlled by someone off stage. She has also asked that the rose be illuminated by lights from under the rose.

Our primary stakeholders are Mrs. Moody, Mr. Grimes, the director, the cast of the musical, and the tech crew of the musical. These people and groups are directly affected by our products since we are submitting it to Mrs. Moody for approval to be used in the musical which will be put on by the cast and tech crew. Our secondary stakeholders are the audience viewing the play, Brentwood High School, the theater production class, and donors of the school. Our products will be seen by many people during the multiple productions of the musical. It will give a positive image of the theater production class and school as a whole by adding to the atmosphere of the musical.
