This project had some good qualities, but it had many things that could be vastly improved upon. For starters, the project officially failed because ours or anyone else's in the class's rose will not be used in the musical. However just because the project failed doesn't mean that this wasn't a very eye opening project that everyone can learn from. The project idea was good but we feel that some more structure in the agenda of our days or construction could have been very helpful to keep everyone on track and working throughout the period. Our group also rushed into the building presses very fast, so we didn't realize that our design would have many roadblocks until we had already built it. Our testing phase went very well, but it didn't last very long because our design started to falter and we had to go back to the building stage to fix the problems. Our problem solving skills and teamwork amped up toward the end of our project when we were trying to fix our clumping string/paperclip problem before Mrs. Moody took a look at our design. All in all, some lessons that we learned from doing this project are things that our group did not do very well. We think it would be helpful for a future group to implement a structured agenda for each day to be able to put out a finished product and make sure that everyone is doing their fair share of the labor.
