

Element A Part 3

AT - 6 points

Problem Importance (A6)

1. For this final paragraph, you need to research why your problem is important. Find articles that you can refer to in your writing. You'll need to list these articles at the end in MLA format.
2. Write a strong argument explaining why your problem matters and why it needs to be solved now. Use facts and numbers from the articles you read to support your points. When you use information from an article, you need to show where it came from. This is called an in-line citation.
3. An in-line citation is different from your list of sources at the end. For an in-line citation, you mention the information and then put the author's last name or the website name in parentheses. If you can find it, include the year it was published, too. Here's a link to help you if you need examples.

Our plan as a community for classroom organization is to establish improvements through every classroom and organize classroom materials. Our problem is that teachers need a convenient way to centralize and organize classroom materials so students can access them easily. This is very important for us and the community of Churchill because we don't have a system to keep items and other things stored safe and accessible.

Reference List: List the sources you cited in MLA format (3 points) engage. "Classroom Essentials – Everything a Teacher Needs Day to Day."

Engage Education, 28 Aug. 2025, engage-education.com/blog/classroom-essentials-everything-a-teacher-needs-day-to-day/. (Accessed 25 Feb. 2026.)

Mathis, Jennifer. "Organizing Your Way to a Better Career and Life." BYU

Marriott Alumni Magazine, (1 Oct. 2012), marriott.byu.edu/magazine/feature/organizing-your-way-to-a-better-career-and-life.

"SimpleK12." Simplek12.com, (July 2024), www.simplek12.com/blog/teacher-supply-checklist-must-haves-your-classroom m.

