

Element B: Documentation and Analysis of Prior Solution Attempts

People can easily lose things such as wallets, identification cards, phones, etc. from their pockets and need a way to keep things in their pockets because those items fall out of their pockets easily. Anyone who has had items fall out of their pockets would be involved in our project. This problem occurs everywhere in the world, from at home to traversing a big city. People often lose items from their pockets because their pockets are too small, so the items do not fully fit into the pockets.

One previous solution is zipper pockets. For this solution, the pocket has a zipper running the length of the opening, and nothing inside can fall out. This is a very effective solution that is a modern twist on classical designs and is convenient without sacrificing style, and ensures that nothing will fall out of your pocket. However, the zippers can jam or break, they can scratch you when you try to retrieve items, and it may take you longer to retrieve items from the pocket. This solution tends to cost $20-$50 per pair of pants with zippers according to Costco (Zipper Pocket Pants, n.d.).

Another previous solution is the fanny pack. A fanny pack is similar to a belt but has a pocket where you can store items. It has a zipper, velcro, or some other method of staying shut, and it tends to be cheap, generally costing under $20 dollars according to Amazon (Amazon. Com | Money Belt for Travel, Slim RFID Blocking Women and Men Hidden Travel Pouch under Clothes, Passport Holder Protect Cash, Documents, Credit Card, Bonus 2 RFID Sleeves | Travel Wallets, n.d.). However, it is small and doesn't fit a lot of items.

The pocket twist technique is a method by a Reddit user (Voyevoda67, n.d.) where you insert your hand into your pocket and rotate it one full turn. This will keep things from falling out of your pocket until the next time that you put your hand in. This is a very easy solution that requires little time and no money, but the instructions seem vague, and it does not work.

Reddit thread concerning pockets

The pocket protector is a small pocket made out of a durable material like silicone or leather that fits into other pockets and keeps them from getting damaged. It does its job very well, it can organize your pocket, and it protects your clothes, but it is very small and looks unprofessional.
